

LABIUM SIDE TABLE

In the shapes, as in the name, a clear reference to a musical wind instrument. An impeccable workmanship of travertine that highlights in the hollowed-out part of the throat the unique characteristics of this stone. An unexpected design that seems to expel the specific weight of the material in which it is made. The shape implies its inspiration, in fact in music it represents the typical shape of some wind instruments.

Monolithic milled structure in solid Roman Travertine.
